The Role of Courts in Managing the Collateral Consequences of Conviction:
A Conversation with Judge John Gleeson

Thursday, September 29, 2016
8:30am-11:00am
ILR NYC Conference Center
16 East 34th Street, 6th floor
New York, NY

Last year, Judge John Gleeson caused a stir when he expunged the record of a woman he had sentenced years before and later issued what he called a “certificate of rehabilitation” to one of her codefendants. The 2nd circuit reversed his order, holding that federal courts, unlike the courts in many states, have no authority to grant this relief. At the time, Judge Gleeson said that he wanted to “get the conversation started” about what courts can do to assist people dealing with the debilitating effects of a criminal record.

Following Judge Gleeson’s lead, we will consider the role of the courts in mitigating or avoiding collateral consequences, including how courts interact with other branches of government in restoring rights and status after conviction.

Joining Judge Gleeson will be:

- Judge Matthew J. D’Emic, NYS Supreme Court, Administrative Judge for Criminal Matters, Kings County Supreme Court;
- Margaret Love, Law Office of Margaret Love; former United States Pardon Attorney in the Justice Department;
- Michael Pope, Director of Legal Services, Youth Represent, and Board Member for the American Bar Association’s Commission on Youth at Risk;
- Ted Potrikus, President and CEO, Retail Council of New York State
